

I am outraged that Sinclair Broadcasting is being allowed the ability to force their stations to air an anti-Kerry documentary days before the election. This is a perfect example of the dangers of media consolidation.

The public interest is what should be served, and by law, Sinclair -- which uses the airways free of charge -- is obligated to do so. America prides itself on being a democracy, but when large companies are allowed to control the airwaves, it's only the bottom line that gets served instead of the people and the issues that matter. Is this the America that our soldiers are risking their lives to protect?

The unfair and self-serving actions taken by Sinclair greatly underscore the need for media ownership rules to be strengthened instead of weakened.

Thank you.
Kevin Hubbard